Extraordinary Fishing.

Thomas D. Carnear, president of the Downle B. I P. Company, pointed to an article in the San Francisco Examiner on the strange overflow on the Colorado desert, and began unwinding an explanatory yarn. "Some years ago I was down in that country looking for borax deposits and anything e'se that promised a commercial venture. This little summer clothing weather wou'd have been considered sherry cobbier and two straws in that climate, and the water wasn't good enough to mix with whisky. Well, of course, I got lost. That the proper thing to do in that region, and I didn't wish to break ove the rules. I left camp with a friend who pretended to know all the estmarks of the suffering land, and put off for a little valley where an Iodian told us there were heap of stuff like ashes on the ground.

"My. friend was just a plain, four round exhibition lisr. He didn't know enough about that desert to keep out of a coyote hole in the broad light of noon, and couldn't have found his way if the land had been laid off with guide poets. His borse broke a leg and we turned for camp. We didn't get there. We went up and we went down. Then we did the regulation trick of going in a circle and came back to the dead horse. Our water, grub, strength, and spirite gave out at the same time. Our tongues swelled. Bo did our feet.

"Then a couple of Indians loomed up like the shadow of a great rock in a dry and thirsty land where no water is." They didn't have much to eat, but one of them was carrying about with him a pick and shovel. They said they could take us back to camp in five hours. That was all very nice, but how were we to get there? One of the horses was dead. Mine was beaten out and had to be abandoned. We couldn't waik and were actually dying of thirst and exhaustion.

"Why you no catchum fish?" asked one of the Indians.

"Now, there's a question to put a dying man on the Colorado desert, miles away from water! I thought I had lost my mind or the Indian had. My friend laughed a dry blub-a-inb through his thick tongue. He thought it was a joke, and he'd laugh at a joke if the arch fiend were broiling his soul on a fork. But it was no joke to the Indians. Work is never a joke to them, and to catch fish in the middle of the Colorado desert means work.

"One of them took the plok, the other the shovel, and selecting a spot with much care they begun to dig a bole in the ground. It was just as easy for us to look on and say nothing as to ask why, and a sight easier blistered. They dug through the sand, and then through earth packed and baked almost as hard as a brick wall. Next they struck more sand and then gravel-damp

"They must have been down a dozen feet, or so when one of them grunted. stooped, and obucked out a flapping, wiggling fish! Yes, sir, a fish; and a trout at hat—a true salmo fantenalis. Then in less han ten minutes they had a cup of pure water and another trout. Now, that may sound as comprehensive as a statement of newspaper circulation, but it's the living truth. I knew, of course, that trout live for years in the wet gravel-every fool knows that-but I hadn't any idea that a man could go fishing with a pick and shove! in the middle of the Colors to desert.

"Now this overflow 'usiness explains it There's an underground lake there and when occasion fits it pobs up serenely from below, just like geyeers which generally have their periods of spouling. And you can wager your life that I'll be down there next with my five ounce Leonard; for. mark my word, there'll be great trout fishing on the Colorado bottom during the

DIED FROM A RATTLESNAKE'S BITE .- A death from the blie of a rattlesnake occured on Tuesday in the town of Sandiston, N. J. The victim was William P. Elliott, the 20year-old sen of H. M. Elliott, a well-known farmer. The Elliott farm extends along the western slope of the Kittatiuny Mountains, and some of its fields are infested by rattleenakes. Eight of these reptiles had been killed in one of the fields by berry pickers. Young Edict was crossing this field when be saw a big rattler, and stooped to pick up a stick for a weapon of attack. While in this act another rattler, which he had falled to observe, struck its fange into the back of to observe, struck its fange into the back of the observe, struck its fange into the back of the observe, struck its fange into the back of the contestration of the contestratio home, trying to suck the venem from the wound as he went. Dr J N Miller, of Centreville, attended within an hour after he had been bitten. By this time his hand and arm were greatly swollen and had turned black, his body was spotted, his eyes bloodshot, and he suffered excruciating pairs through his whole system. Powerful antidotes failed to afford relief, and he died after five days' intense suffering.
